TUESDAYPick of the day*HOLBY CITY 8PM BBC1

Holby isn't the most harmonious place to be. If it's not Chrissie (above, left) and Frieda (right) almost tearing each other's hair out, it's Malick and Dan so busy waving their man bits at each other they don't even notice grief-stricken Elizabeth has done a runner. Can't we all get along, guys? It's Sacha (centre) we feel sorry for when Frieda questions Chrissie's professionalism, going at her like Lord Sugar with one his most useless candidates. Caught in the middle, he decides the only way to stop the rowing is to transfer Chrissie to another ward. We wouldn't like to be him when he tells her, though...

Meanwhile, Malick and Dan are butting heads harder than two stags in rutting season. Somebody throw some cold water over them. (GG)

EASTENDERS 7.30PM BBC1

Dot (left) is a woman on the edge. She's so close to the end of her tether that, after a stiff sherry, she can't even fathom how to light her cigarette – which, for a woman who smokes more than an industrial-sized chimney, is saying something. She breaks down, realising she can't look after Jim at home any more, at which point even the world's worst children Carol, Max and Jack are beginning to notice something is up. You might need a stiff drink yourself – prepare for some very emotional scenes, people. (LK)

FOUR ROOMS 8PM CHANNEL 4

Regular folk offer their goods to four antique dealers: Jeff Salmon (the flouncy one), Andrew Lamberty (the serious one), Emma Hawkins (the sexy one) and Gordon Watson (the rotund one), while Anita Rani (right) hosts. The twist is that sellers meet one dealer at a time and can only move on after they've turned down an offer. It may sound a bit like Cash In The Attic, but it's much smarter and more fascinating, so don't write it off. (JH)
